Many people are intrigued by the idea of getting into alternative ways of making money. There is always a quick and easy way to earn an income besides going to work every day. Flipping houses in an ever-changing real estate environment is one way.

However, in addition to the benefits of making money this way, there are also pitfalls. In these cases, flipping houses to make more money is not always as quick and easy as real estate seminar presenters make it sound. Mr. and Mrs. Mirabal learned this the hard way. Farmers Insurance presents their story and what they discovered when flipping a too expensive home for profit.

Farmers Insurance always wants you to be prepared for the unexpected. That's why Jan Sutton is available to answer your questions about Farmers Insurance policies. What is vacant home insurance? This insurance policy covers a home left empty for a specified period. Some reasons for having a vacant home include moving from one home to another before the first home has been sold.

There are times when military personnel are ordered to move to a different duty station in another state or overseas. They may not have enough time to sell their home before they have to move to another location. Another example is an older person moving to an assisted living facility before the family has decided what to do with the home this person has been living in for years.

Vacant home insurance is protection when the unexpected happens to a vacant home. If you think you might have a vacant home at some point, why not give the Janice S. Sutton Insurance Agency a call today? She can explain more about vacant home insurance policies.

Young drivers aren't always prepared to handle the dangers of driving. Teens are excited when they pass their driving tests and receive their first driver's license. However, no matter how prepared they are to drive, they often aren't ready yet for the unexpected.

Life insurance protects a family when the unexpected hits. Automobile insurance will cover damage in case of an accident. Hopefully, you won't have to worry about your newly minted teen driver, but it's always best to be prepared for the unexpected.

Security is a big concern for many homeowners today. The home should be a safe and secure environment for every family. Camera surveillance and access control helps keep homes safe from unwanted intruders.

A fire and smoke warning system with safety features not found in most security systems notifies first responders immediately in case of a home fire. Homeowners will have more fun on vacations free from worry and stress. The system provides passive security to the home and simulates a lived in look.

Homeowners can upgrade to an automated home security system that provides instant access to quality security, lighting, climate control and audio/video devices at the touch of a button. Lights will automatically light a dark home or room. A distributed audio system makes it easy for anyone to wirelessly stream music choices to any room in the home. Home lighting is easily adapted to an individual need for more or less light. Effective energy management provides a comfortable living environment at home while saving energy when residents are away. Homeowners may use a smartphone, tablet or another automation product to control security, lighting, energy management and entertainment in their homes.

Here are some more tips from Farmers Insurance on how to protect your home from unexpected break-ins and thefts. It also won't hurt to have the right insurance coverage for your home. The Janice S. Sutton Insurance agency can offer the right advice and answer all your home insurance questions.

It's a known fact that drivers shouldn't text while driving. Texting is a distraction that prevents a driver from watching the road while driving. Drivers should be paying attention to other drivers and pedestrians crossing intersections. When a driver is texting, he is looking down at his mobile phone device. This may cause an accident because the driver is not paying attention while driving. Have you heard of how a hamster caused a driver to be distracted? You can read more about how this happened. Farmers Insurance knows what to do when the unexpected happens.
